The work will be completed in a few months—at the earliest day on which a well-prepared history of the late struggle can be obtained. It will be incomparably superior to those works already "completed," most of which were written lour before Gen. Grant's Report was made.

I have read the work with deep interest, and consider is welf-dedly the best History of the Great Robellion which has yet been written.

If the complete History shall realize the promise of the first volume, we cannot hope, until the lapse of years, for a better view of the whole stependous struggle.

S. P. Grass. Chief Justice U. S.

It bears the marks of labor, studied candor and accuracy.

W. M. H. Saward, Secretary of State.

It everywhere furnishes striking proofs of the impartiality enlightened research and true American spirit of its accountible of the structure of the strike of the strike of the property of the strike of the origin, cause and progress of the late Robellion that has yet been published and progress of the late Robellion that has yet been published consider it the most complete, useful and attractive work that he was been written on the subject.

The great the most favorable opinion of the work.

The great industry and impartiality of Mr. Oreelev will make this the text of all future histories of the Great Rebellion which I have a form the orea of the Histories of the Great Rebellion which I have a form the doubted reference. To go in the country.
